Autobiographical

HOW to conduct a sport column when there is being conducted very little sport is a problem to us that promises to become increasingly vexatious. Still, there is no cause for worry. It wouldn't be surprising if the world would continue to go round were there no such thing as a sport column or any other kind of column, the main difficulty being that in that contingency there are some of us who would be forced to go round apace. But jobs are easy to be had.

When writing, a university professor out in the wilds of Ohio, where marauding Indians creep up on the hardy pioneers (Eastern collegiate viewpoint, once told us that all writing was more or less reminiscence, and that much of the best of it was autobiographical. He said there was an such writing a psychology of sympathetic appeal. Only in writing psychology on the blackboard he spelled it wrong, which we did not fail to call his attention to at the conclusion of class, thereby gaining a distinction in his eye and an impression of being a bright, young lad that doubtless we could have achieved in no other way.

The psychology of sympathetic appeal? Meaning unquestionably that what interests us will interest you. Psychology is certainly a good word and an interesting study. We have it on every hand. As we understand the slacker raid last week in which the tremendous total of 199 remissions was identified among the 60,000 men who were boldly stopped by the daring agents of the Department of Justice, bolstered up on either side and behind by the boys in blue, was conducted for psychological reasons. With the 18 to 45 registration day imminently at hand it was thought to duly impress prospective select men with the importance of registering, though evidently among the advantages of this was not that of not being herded into trucks and detained at armories if one happened to venture abroad without his classification card.

Gasless Sundays, too, we have heard are more psychology than gasoline. Since there is a certain four-cylinder car (made in Detroit) that will run from Peoria to Paris, swimming the Atlantic Ocean en route and on its own hook, on a thimbleful of gasoline, how can the proprietor and engineer of such a vehicle be thought to be an enemy to conservation should he run his car on Sunday. To be sure, a thimbleful of gasoline is a thimbleful of gasoline, but, on the other hand, if this certain four-cylinder car (made in Detroit) will wear out two tires to every thimbleful of gasoline it is obvious that the increased income tax of the rubber industries will more than offset the market price of a thimbleful of gasoline and will purchase in food and munitions more than an equivalent. Two and two are four, a thimbleful of gasoline is a thimbleful of gasoline, and an income tax is an income tax!

Psychology is certainly a great study. (Mental note: Why not write a moving picture scenario based on psychology? Because we do not know how to write a moving picture scenario. Exit: Mental note.)

To be autobiographical, as the university professor out in the wilds of Ohio said, is the thing. (Observation: It was too bad that the Ohio State University eleven did not meet Rutgers last fall. There would have been a game. It is doubtful if the fine defensive play of Robeson could have spoiled the attack of "Chick" Harley. Yet it might. Auburn stopped Harley in a post-season game, but that shouldn't be taken too seriously, as the O. S. U. eleven had finished its season and regarded the trip south as more or less a joy ride. Georgia Tech overwhelmingly—we think that is the word—defeated Auburn earlier in the season, but Tech was at the top of its form and fresh then. It was fresh later, too, and probably the best team in the country. End, Observation Football.)

Now to be autobiographical. Promptly at 8 o'clock the alarm clock rang. Promptly at 8 o'clock we arose and turned off the alarm clock, set it for 8:30 o'clock and went back to bed. (Mental note: Why not place the alarm clock on the floor to obviate the necessity of arising? Good idea.) Promptly at 8:30 o'clock the alarm clock rang. Promptly at 8:30 o'clock we arose and turned off the alarm clock, set it for 9 o'clock and went back to bed. Promptly at 9 o'clock the alarm clock rang. Not so promptly at 9 o'clock we arose and began to dress.

Attaining the street and now being fully awake we reached the conclusion that it might rain. If such were the case we decided it would be as well, if not a little better, to have an umbrella, hesitating only because we felt it to be a mortal certainty that if we carried an umbrella it would not rain, whereas it would do so if we did not.

Breakfast. Pank. (Observation: If Childs on Columbus Circle continues to serve stewed apricots without sugar we shall be forced in the near future to abandon this white, palatial, sun bathed breakfast room for some place with a less alabaster brow, that is more liberal with its saccharine.) Check 25 cents; tip 10 cents. (Mental note: It would have been as inexpensive to have invited the waitress to have breakfast with us.)

Transit. It is at this stage of our diary that we are compelled to tip off a traffic secret to the Shontsonian army that piles into the Columbus Circle kiosk each morning and executes a wave attack on the City Hall local, often gaining the needful distance on the third down. We may be revealing a secret, but at Fifty-eighth Street and Sixth Avenue the Rector Street elevated trains are made up, possibly for the benefit of the New York Athletic Club, or the large number of bankers and brokers who motor that far and continue to the city's marts overhead. Merely by looking like a banker or a broker or a member of the New York Athletic Club one may obtain often as much as an entire crosscut to himself, and may thus ride downtown without balancing a fat lady on his feet during the larger part of the journey. (Observation: Does every one appreciate the wide following maintained by the market and financial departments of our newspapers? A banker with a market page is more immersed than a barber with a box score.)

Office. Business of walking briskly to our desk with an audience of six new, short-skirted office girls. (Mental note: Can audience be used other than in the sense of hearing? To be sure it is said often in description of the crowd at a football game, racetrack, etc., but wouldn't spectators be more correct? Don't know; will look it up sometime.) Business of looking over the mail, very slim, and explaining to a new office girl that it is true that certain afternoon papers known as "The World," "Telegram" and "Journal" are on the street and may be procured as early as 9:15 o'clock. Looks of juvenile unbelief. Business of explaining the desirability of reading a certain baseball prophet's leucubrations. Looks of juvenile incomprehension. (Mental note: Well, these new copy "boys" will never bother anybody for a baseball ticket. But how about the football games? Exit: Mental note.)

Business of profound thought interrupted only by eighteen telephone calls, the consciousness of a trunk lost in transit between Ninety-eighth Street and Columbus Circle, fifteen fresh guys saying, "Well, I see the Cubs lost," etc., etc., etc.
